Multiple sources confirm medicine spending growth was between just 3 and 5 percent in 2016. Unfortunately, it doesn’t feel that way for you. More than one-third of a medicine’s list price is often rebated back to middlemen, like insurers and pharmacy benefit managers (PBMs). These rebates and discounts create savings of more than $100 billion, but insurers don’t always share these savings with patients.

What’s skyrocketing – the cost of your medicine...

or what your insurer is making you pay for it?

Multiple sources confirm medicine spending growth was between just 3 and 5 percent in 2016. Unfortunately, it doesn’t feel that way for you. More than one-third of a medicine’s list price is often rebated back to middlemen, like insurers and pharmacy benefit managers (PBMs). These rebates and discounts create savings of more than $100 billion, but insurers don’t always share these savings with patients.

*What’s Let’sTalkAboutCost.org